

Playing the Long Game: Bock Settlement and Land Acquisition in Smith County, Kansas, 1872–1921

Prepared by Ryan E. Bock in collaboration with Claude (Anthropic), 3 July 2026

Introduction

Robert Bock — baptized Emil Robert Bock, but known by his second name in the German custom of the Rufname, or call name — was born 12 April 1840 in Döschnitz, a village in the Thuringian principality of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt. He arrived in the United States in November 1865, naturalized in Rochester, New York, in October 1871, and homesteaded a quarter section in Smith County, Kansas, the following spring, the first member of his family to do so. Over the next thirty-eight years, that single 160-acre claim grew, through a land exchange, an inheritance, a windfall from Germany, and a series of purchases, into a compact estate spread across two townships — and then, on the death of Robert's younger brother Ottomar in 1909, was divided among a widow and two sons, each of whom took sole possession of one piece. This essay traces that process from Robert's arrival in Kansas to the settlement of Ottomar's estate in 1910, and follows the land a little further, into the 1910s and early 1920s, to show what became of it once it had passed out of the generation that built it. A map showing the Smith County territories owned and farmed by the Bocks appears as an appendix at the end of this essay.

Robert's Homestead, 1872–1879

Robert's choice of Smith County was likely not his own idea. During his years in Rochester, New York, Robert had come to know William Schroeder (1840–1926), a German-born tailor and the brother-in-law of Gustav Bock — a fellow Döschnitz native and possibly distant relative who served as one of two witnesses at Robert's naturalization hearing on 16 October 1871. Schroeder left Rochester for Smith County in 1871 and filed his own homestead claim there that July; Robert followed eight months later. He filed his homestead application at the U.S. Land Office in Concordia, Kansas, on 25 March 1872, for the northeast quarter of Section 10, Township 4 South, Range 11 West — land that would later fall within Webster Township, though the township itself was not organized until 1885 and the area was administered as part of Oak Township at the time¹.

Robert settled on the claim that August and built a stone house measuring sixteen by eighteen feet, with a cellar of the same dimensions, a well, corn cribs, and a stable. He broke thirty of his 160 acres and raised corn, potatoes, vegetables, and a small planting of tobacco — a modest, telling trace of Old World habit carried onto the Kansas plains². He proved up his claim on 13 March 1879, with fellow German immigrants Joseph Schwarz and Gustav Lack as his witnesses, and received his patent, Final Certificate No. 2097, on 30 December 1879³.

The Bock-Kattenberg Land Swap, 1884

In 1884, according to a family history compiled decades later by Robert's great-niece Maxine Bock Mansholt, Robert traded his homestead quarter with a neighbor, John Kattenberg (1854–1936), also of Oak Township, in order to get away from a creek and, in Maxine's words, "all the noise" made by the "varmits" along it⁴. The land Robert received was Kattenberg's own homestead, the southwest quarter of Section 3, immediately north of Robert's original claim. Kattenberg had entered this land under Homestead Entry No. 5179 and filed his notice of intention to make final proof in the summer of 1883; his witnesses, sworn before the Clerk of the District Court at Smith Center on 20 August 1883, were Mathias Hermes, Fred Trentwedel, and "Robt Buck" [sic], all of Stuart, Kansas⁵. Kattenberg's patent was issued 15 March 1884 and announced as ready for delivery at the Kirwin land office that June⁶ — very likely the occasion, or shortly after it, on which the exchange with Robert was actually executed, since Kattenberg could not convey clear title to land he had not yet received patent for. Robert had, in effect, sworn to a federal official the year before that he knew this exact 160 acres — its residence, its cultivation, its owner's good faith — before it ever became his own home.

The timing invites a further explanation alongside Maxine's account of noise and varmints. The exchange was very likely finalized in mid-to-late 1884 — less than a year before Ottomar and his family, who almost certainly knew where they were headed, arrived in May 1885. It is plausible that Robert, anticipating their arrival, saw something in Kattenberg's tract that would make it a more suitable home for all of them.

Reunion, and a Family Rebuilt, 1885–1886

On 25 May 1885, Robert's younger brother Ottomar Bock (1845–1909) arrived in Smith County from Döschnitz with his wife, Pauline (née Möller, 1844–1911), and their seven children: Clara, Emil, Lydia, Rudolph, Carl, Augusta ("Gusta"), and Gottlob. An eighth child, Lena, was born in Lebanon that October, the first of Ottomar and Pauline's children born on American soil.

Family tradition, recorded by Mansholt, has generally credited a single motive for this emigration: Ottomar's desire to keep his four sons from being conscripted into the German army's two-year term of service, required of sixteen-year-olds under the Empire founded in 1871. That motive was almost certainly real, and it was shared by many German emigrant families of this generation. But it is not the whole story, and the documentary record gives at least as much weight to a plainer, harder cause, one with roots reaching back to Ottomar's own childhood. His father, the Döschnitz village physician Dr. Johann Gottlob Bock (1804–1855), died suddenly of an acute febrile illness when Ottomar was only nine years old, taking with him the one asset that could not simply be inherited: a medical practice, which vanished the moment its practitioner did, and leaving his widow, Theresia, to raise five surviving children largely on her own⁷. The household's economic position never fully recovered.

The Döschnitz parish register recorded Ottomar's own occupation at each of his children's baptisms, and the sequence traces a continued decline: Oeconom — independent farm operator — at Emil's birth in 1871; Fleischer und Oeconom, butcher and farm operator, at Lydia's in 1873 and Carl's in 1877; briefly Landwirt, farmer, at Augusta's in 1880; and by Gottlob's birth in December 1883, only Handarbeiter — a landless manual day-laborer, the lowest designation the register used for him⁸. By the time the family made its decision to leave, Ottomar's own village pastor had, in effect, recorded him as having lost his independent livelihood. When he declared his occupation to Thuringian emigration officials in 1885, he gave it as Landwirt once more⁹ — whether a genuine last recovery or simply the occupation he preferred to present on his way out of the country is impossible to say from the record alone. Conscription and economic ruin were not competing explanations; both pressed on the family at once, and either one might have been sufficient to send them across the Atlantic to join a brother they had not seen in twenty years.

By Mansholt's account, all eleven family members lived together on Robert's Section 3 quarter in a single-room sod house — a sharp contrast to the stone house Robert had built and left behind on his original claim¹⁰. That arrangement did not last long. Fourteen months after the family's arrival, a Harlan newspaper reported that "Robt. Bock, Oak Creek," was "building [a] residence" with locally supplied lumber¹¹ — hard evidence that the sod-house period was short-lived.

Robert's Death, 1893

Robert remained an active presence on his own land into his final years: in April 1888, he appeared in person before the Smith County commissioners to dispute an erroneous assessment — the item gives "section 2," almost certainly a compositor's slip for Section 3, the only quarter he is otherwise documented to have held — and was granted a refund on a valuation of $165¹².

Robert died on or about 24 January 1893, "at his home 3 miles south of" Lebanon — a distance roughly consistent with Section 3's position at the northern edge of Webster Township — according to a brief notice in The Lebanon Times, which named him "Robert Buck" [sic]¹³. He was unmarried, had no children, and his estate was not settled quickly. Indeed, a Notice of Final Settlement did not appear until 26 March 1896, more than three years after his death. The county named William Schrader as administrator of the estate, and set a hearing before the Smith County probate court for 18 April 1896¹⁴. Schrader — whose name also appears in the family's records as Schroeder and Shrader — was the same William Schroeder who Robert had followed to Smith County from Rochester in 1872 and whom Robert had farmed alongside in the same community for over twenty years. The same connection who brought Robert to Kansas also closed out his affairs there. The notice does not state who obtained Robert's land, but by 1900 Ottomar owned it — suggesting a direct inheritance.

A Windfall from Germany, and Two Purchases, 1898

Back in Döschnitz, Pauline's family — the Möller half-siblings and uncles she had left behind thirteen years earlier — settled her father's estate in 1898, nearly two decades after his 1879 death. One of her half-sisters, Louise, died before the estate was divided. This resulted in a forfeiting of her share — about $3,000 — which Pauline's uncle Florenz set aside to be distributed among the family's descendants a century later, in 1998, according to a history Pauline's son Emil wrote in 1935.

Pauline received her own share that same spring, a fact that is established in an early April news item in the Smith County Pioneer: "Mrs. Ottoman [sic] Bock has fallen heir to quite a lot of money from Germany, within the last few weeks."¹⁵ The windfall was almost certainly the source of the capital behind two significant land purchases that her husband would make over the next several months. One week later, the same paper's Harlan-area correspondent noted that "Ottoman [sic] Bock has purchased the Lon Wright farm of 160 acres"¹⁶. The deed, recorded that October, showed the seller as A. A. and Jennie Wright and the land as the northwest quarter of Section 10 — Township 4 South, Range 11 West — for $1,325¹⁷. This quarter had originally been homesteaded by George G. Patch in 1877 and patented in 1883; the Wrights had acquired it sometime before 1891, when Alonzo "Lon" Wright rented out the farm and moved his family to Missouri, retaining title until the 1898 sale. The purchase placed Ottomar directly across the section line from the family's existing Section 3 quarter, the two parcels sharing a common boundary.

Three months later, on 27 July 1898, Ottomar purchased an additional 160 acres from W. S. Fields — the south half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of Section 36, Township 2 South, Range 11 West, in White Rock Township, roughly twelve miles north of the family's existing land — for $1,675¹⁸. Fields himself had bought the same land from Ira and Martha Munsell only days before, for $1,500, and the transaction has the look of an ordinary purchase from a small-scale land dealer rather than a deal among longtime neighbors, of the kind that produced the Wright purchase.

Together, the two 1898 purchases came to exactly $3,000 — evidently the whole of Pauline's share. Whether Florenz's arrangement for Louise's forfeited share ever matured as planned is a question for the Rudolstadt State Archive; nothing in the American or German record confirms it survived two world wars and a currency collapse. What's certain is plainer: money arrived from Germany in the spring of 1898, and within months it had become Kansas farmland.

Emil's 1912 trip to Germany with his wife, children, and sister Gusta is a plausible occasion for the story about the deferred Möller inheritance to have reached him firsthand. He spent four months that summer based in Sitzendorf, near Döschnitz, the only time any of the Smith County Bocks ever returned to Thuringia. But his three surviving letters from that trip, all published in the *Smith County Journal*¹⁹, describe castle ruins and old schoolmates and say nothing of the Möller estate. If the visit refreshed his knowledge of Florenz's arrangement, no trace of that conversation survives in his own words.

Consolidation and Improvements, 1898–1904

By the time of the 1900 county atlas, Ottomar's holdings comprised the southwest quarter of Section 3 — Robert's former home — and the northwest quarter of Section 10, the Wright purchase, the two parcels forming a contiguous 320-acre block straddling the section line²⁰. His eldest surviving son, Emil (1871–1939), held eighty acres of his own in the southwest quarter of Section 10, alongside a neighbor, G. McCullough, who held the remaining eighty. John Kattenberg still held the northeast quarter of the same section — Robert's original claim — and Mathias Hermes the southeast, a settlement pattern of long standing among the same handful of German immigrant families who had been proving up neighboring claims, and witnessing one another's federal land filings, since the 1870s.

By 1904, the family had been living for years in a stone house — quarried and built up in stages after their sod-house start, according to Mansholt's account²¹ — which became the basement of the grand new residence built around it²². Two weeks later, a local correspondent reported that "Ottoman [sic] Bock's new house will soon be completed. It will make them a beautiful home"²³. The following year, a neighboring town newspaper reported on his completion of a "splendid new barn"²⁴. Together, these improvements marked a considerable upgrade — in the space of nineteen years — from the one-room sod house Ottomar's family had shared with his brother on the same land in 1885.

Ottomar's Death and the Division of the Land, 1909–1910

Ottomar reportedly died on 25 September 1909 of consumption (tuberculosis), after a lasting illness²⁵. His youngest unmarried daughter, Gusta, had returned from a career in dressmaking in Concordia earlier that year to help her mother, Pauline, nurse him through his final decline²⁶. By December, the Smith County Messenger was referring to the administration of "the estate of the late Ottomer [sic] Bock," and Emil had been appointed legal guardian of his sister Clara, who had a lifelong intellectual disability²⁷.

The estate was settled the following spring in a chain of three deeds, recorded for the week ending 19 April 1910 and reported in both the Athol Record and the Smith County Pioneer²⁸:

- For the Section 3 Webster quarter — the family's original home ground — Pauline and the other heirs conveyed their shares to G. O. Bock, for $6,954.28.
- For the Section 10 Webster quarter — the 1898 Wright purchase — G. O. Bock and the other heirs conveyed their shares to Emil G. Bock, for $6,500.
- For the White Rock quarter, Emil and the other heirs conveyed their shares to Pauline Bock, for $7,196.42.

The pattern is a standard method of settling an estate among multiple heirs holding an undivided interest in several parcels: rather than dividing each 160-acre tract into fractional shares, the heirs concentrated their interests, each buying out the others in one parcel so that each ended up owning a single tract outright. Gottlob Oscar Bock (1883–1936) — Ottomar's youngest son, who had already been referred to locally as having "bought the home farm" that January²⁹ — took full title to the Section 3 quarter, the family's original home ground since Robert's 1884 exchange. Emil took the Section 10 quarter, the 1898 Wright purchase. Pauline, recently widowed, kept the White Rock land for herself, having bought out Emil's and the other heirs' shares in it. She moved into Lebanon that March and died there a year later, on 27 March 1911.

Conclusion: What Robert and Ottomar Built, and What Became of It

By the time of his death, Ottomar had turned a single inherited quarter section into three: a home place built from his brother's industriousness and his own family's labor, a second quarter bought with a family inheritance that had crossed the Atlantic from Thuringia, and a third acquired at arm's length in a township the family had no prior connection to. Ottomar had also, by 1904, replaced Robert's sod house that had sheltered eleven people in 1885 with a proper house the neighbors thought worth calling beautiful. The county's own appraisal of his estate that November put a number on it: 480 acres — the three quarter sections exactly — valued at $20,000³⁰.

Set against the occupational record from Döschnitz, the scale of that achievement comes into sharper focus. The man whose own village pastor had recorded him, in December 1883, as a landless day-laborer — the lowest standing the parish register had for him — died twenty-six years later owning three quarter sections of Kansas farmland outright, restoring and then exceeding the Landwirt status he had claimed for himself, perhaps aspirationally, on his way out of Germany.

That reversal was not his alone to claim. It rested on his brother Robert's decade of solitary homesteading and proving-up before Ottomar ever set foot in Kansas; on Pauline's family in Thuringia, whose 1898 estate settlement handed the household $3,000 at the one moment it could be converted directly into land; and on Ottomar and Pauline's own willingness, in 1885, with their children and whatever they could carry, to cross an ocean and start over. Remove any one of the three, and the outcome looks considerably less certain.

The 1910 settlement did not keep this small estate together — it deliberately broke it into three separately held parcels, one for each of his widow and two of his sons — but it kept the land within the family, at least for a time. That time proved limited for at least one of the three parcels. A 1917 county atlas shows Gottlob still in possession of the Section 3 quarter, and Emil's Section 10 holding grown considerably. Emil had been building independently even before his father's death, buying 110 acres from Ben Toothman in September 1905 for $3,000³¹; after the 1910 settlement gave him full title to the inherited Section 10 quarter, he added a further 160 acres — again "the Ben Toothman farm," which had passed through a third owner, Charles Anderson, in the interim — for $12,500 in January 1915, which The Lebanon Times reported brought his holdings to "four hundred acres"³², matching the figure shown on the 1917 atlas. A further purchase of the old Mathias Hermes quarter followed just two months later³³, though how that later addition squares with the atlas's unchanged 400-acre figure two years afterward is not resolved by the sources presently at hand.

Gottlob's piece of the inheritance did not stay in the family long. He sold the Section 3 quarter to L. E. (Leslie) Chase in May 1920 for $14,000³⁴ — more than double the $6,954.28 he'd paid for it a decade earlier. Two months later he bought 320 acres elsewhere in Webster Township from J. F. Swallow for $19,300³⁵.

Emil's holdings tell the opposite story: what began as his father's estate share grew, through his own steady purchases, into roughly 400 acres by 1917 — the one piece of the inheritance that stayed in the family. The ground Robert had broken sod on in 1872, and that Ottomar and Pauline had later called home, did not.

Notes

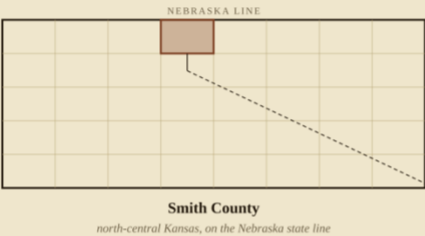

1. Athol Record, 21 April 1910, p. 1; "Chapter III: Survey to Settlement," in Pletcher, Vera Edith Crosby, "A History of Smith County, Kansas to 1960," M.A. thesis, Kansas State University, 1960.
2. Robert Bock, Homestead Proof, Testimony of Claimant, 13 March 1879. U.S. National Archives, General Land Entry File, Homestead Application No. 6934.
3. U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, General Land Office Records, <https://glorerecords.blm.gov>; Robert Bock, Homestead Proof, Testimony of Witnesses, 13 March 1879, U.S. National Archives, General Land Entry File, Homestead Application No. 6934.
4. Bock Mansholt, Maxine, "Bock Family Genealogy," unpublished manuscript, compiled 1976–1978.
5. Salem Argus (Salem, Kansas), 19 July 1883, p. 4.
6. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 20 June 1884, p. 3.
7. Bock, Ryan E., "Dr. Johann Gottlob Bock (1804–1855)," unpublished research note, 2026.
8. Archion.de, Landeskirchenarchiv Eisenach, Kirchenkreis Rudolstadt-Saalfeld, Döschnitz-Meura, Taufen 1868–1889, Bilder 35, 54, 77, 99, 120, 157.
9. Thüringisches Staatsarchiv Rudolstadt, Auswandererdatenbank, Entry 396 (1885).
10. Bock Mansholt, Maxine, "Bock Family Genealogy," unpublished manuscript, compiled 1976–1978.
11. The Harlan Advocate (Harlan, Kansas), 29 July 1886, p. 3.
12. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 26 April 1888, p. 1.
13. The Lebanon Times (Lebanon, Kansas), 27 January 1893, p. 4.
14. Smith County Journal (Smith Center, Kansas), 26 March 1896, p. 3.
15. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 7 April 1898, p. 8.
16. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 14 April 1898, p. 8.
17. Smith County Journal (Smith Center, Kansas), 6 October 1898, p. 3; The Lebanon Journal (Lebanon, Kansas), 8 October 1898, p. 1; Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 20 October 1898, p. 3.
18. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 4 August 1898, p. 4; The Kensington Mirror (Kensington, Kansas), 5 August 1898, p. 5.
19. Smith County Journal (Smith Center, Kansas), 30 May 1912, p. 8; 18 July 1912, p. 8; 8 August 1912, p. 8.
20. Standard Atlas of Smith County, Kansas (1900), Webster Township [plat map], Kansas Historical Society.
21. Bock Mansholt, Maxine, "Bock Family Genealogy," unpublished manuscript, compiled 1976–1978.

22. The Lebanon Argus (Lebanon, Kansas), 8 April 1904, p. 4.
23. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 21 April 1904, p. 4.
24. The Downs Times (Downs, Kansas), 1 June 1905, p. 2.
25. The Smith County Messenger (Smith Center, Kansas), 30 September 1909, p. 4; The Lebanon Times (Lebanon, Kansas), 30 September 1909, p. 1.
26. Bock McClaren Citations with Images [family research compilation], entry on Augusta ("Gusta") Bock.
27. The Smith County Messenger (Smith Center, Kansas), 23 December 1909, p. 5; Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 2 December 1909, p. 5.
28. The Athol Record (Athol, Kansas), 21 April 1910, p. 1; Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 21 April 1910, p. 5.
29. Smith County Journal (Smith Center, Kansas), 13 January 1910, p. 7.
30. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 25 November 1909, p. 3.
31. Smith County Pioneer (Smith Centre, Kansas), 28 September 1905, p. 8.
32. The Lebanon Times (Lebanon, Kansas), 7 January 1915, p. 2.
33. The Lebanon Times (Lebanon, Kansas), 25 March 1915, p. 6.
34. Smith County Journal (Smith Center, Kansas), 27 May 1920, p. 3.
35. The Kensington Mirror (Kensington, Kansas), 1 July 1920, p. 1.

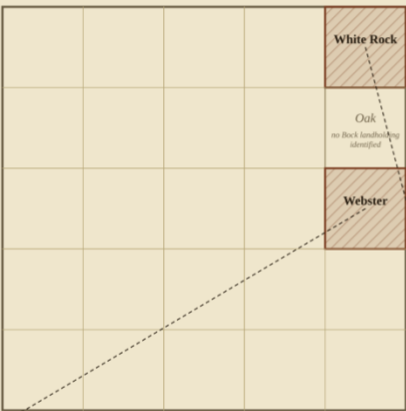

THE BOCK LANDHOLDINGS

Smith County, Kansas · 1872–1921

A — KANSAS

B — SMITH COUNTY TOWNSHIPS

Range 11 West (right column) — White Rock, Oak, Webster, north to south

C — WEBSTER TOWNSHIP (T4S R11W), SECTIONS 3 & 10

NW ¼ — 160 ac. not yet researched	NE ¼ — 160 ac. not yet researched
SW ¼ — 160 ac. ¹ John Kattenberg — 1877–1884 Robert Bock — 1884–1893 Ottomar Bock — 1893–1910 Gottlob O. Bock — 1910–1920 L. E. Chase — 1920–	SE ¼ — 160 ac. ² Jos. Schwartz — 1900–1917, documented shared section boundary
NW ¼ — 160 ac. ³ George G. Patch — 1877–ca. 1885 A. A. & Jennie Wright — ca. 1885–1898 Ottomar Bock — 1898–1910 Emil G. Bock — 1910–	NE ¼ — 160 ac. ⁴ Robert Bock — 1872–1884 John Kattenberg — 1884–1917
SW ¼ — 160 ac. (split) ⁵ Emil G. Bock — by 1900, 80 ac. G. McCullough — by 1900, 80 ac. simultaneous half-owners, not sequential	SE ¼ — 160 ac. ⁶ Mathias Hermes — 1871–1915 Emil G. Bock — 1915–

D — WHITE ROCK TWP.
(T2S R11W), SECTION 36

NW ¼ not part of Bock tract	N ½ NE ¼ not part of Bock tract
	S ½ NE ¼ — 80 ac. ⁷ W. S. Fields — 1898, held days Ottomar Bock — 1898–1909/10 continues into N ½ SE ¼ below
SW ¼ not part of Bock tract	S ½ SE ¼ — 80 ac. Pauline Bock — 1910–1911 Sarah A. Calloway — 1912–at least 1917
	S ½ SE ¼ not part of Bock tract

Lies well north of Webster — shown at true remove, not adjacent

Bold roman — Bock family owner

Italic — non-Bock owner

^{superscript numerals} key to the numbered sources below

SOURCES

1. Sec. 3, SW ¼ — Kattenberg: Salem Argus, 19 Jul 1883; GLO patent, 15 Mar 1884. R. Bock: Bock Mansholt manuscript, 1976-78; Lebanon Times, 27 Jan 1893. O. Bock: Standard Atlas of Smith County, 1900. G. Bock: Athol Record & Smith County Pioneer, 21 Apr 1910. Chase: Smith County Journal, 27 May 1920.

4. Sec. 10, NE ¼ — R. Bock: Homestead Application No. 6934, 25 Mar 1872; Final Certificate No. 2097. Kattenberg: GLO patent, 15 Mar 1884; Platbook, 1917.

6. Sec. 10, SE ¼ — Hermes: Tract Book, T4S R11W, p. 160. Emil Bock: Lebanon Times, 25 Mar 1915.

2. Sec. 3, SE ¼ — Schwartz: Standard Atlas, 1900; Platbook of Smith County, 1917.

3. Sec. 10, NW ¼ — Patch: Smith County Pioneer, 22 Sep 1882; GLO patent, 3 Feb 1883. Wright: Smith County Pioneer, 19 Feb 1891; Lebanon Journal, 21 Feb 1891. O. Bock: Smith County Journal, 6 Oct 1898. Emil Bock: Athol Record, 21 Apr 1910.

5. Sec. 10, SW ¼ — Emil Bock & McCullough: Standard Atlas, 1900.

7. White Rock Sec. 36 — Fields: Smith County Pioneer, 4 Aug 1898. O. Bock: same; Standard Atlas, 1900 (White Rock Twp.). Pauline Bock: Athol Record & Smith County Pioneer, 21 Apr 1910. Calloway: Emil Bock press clippings; Smith County Pioneer, 7 Mar 1912; Platbook, 1917.